PRESS RELEASE

New address for Lapointe Rosenstein Marchand Melançon

Montreal, April 22, 2016 – The team of Lapointe Rosenstein Marchand Melançon (“LRMM”) will move into its new offices, located at 1 Place Ville Marie in Montreal, on Friday, April 29th.

This is a highly anticipated moment for members of the firm, who will find themselves in new functional, spacious and modern work areas. In recent months, many activities have allowed everyone to participate actively in this major project.

“Throughout the process we have ensured that it is a team project and that our people feel involved,” says Luc Mailhot, Executive Director and project lead. “We kept them regularly informed about the progress of construction work. For example, surveys were conducted to collect their opinions on the choice of their new furniture.”

With a few days left before the move, what do the new offices look like? The space has been designed to provide lots of light. Employees will have their corner bistro, which will facilitate discussions. A coffee bar has been installed near the library; lawyers will be able to sip their coffee while viewing reference material. Many of the conference rooms will have movable walls, which will allow for the creation of bigger spaces for holding receptions and conferences. These rooms will be equipped with the latest technological equipment.

“The partners have agreed to occupy standard offices, smaller than before, in order to provide a better working environment for their employees,” notes Christopher Deehy, partner and member of the management committee. “We had to take the lead so that there is less paper and therefore less space used to store files. We are slimming down in terms of square footage while rejuvenating our offices. All these changes are stimulating the troops! Our employees are eager to settle into Place Ville Marie.” He adds: “Our clients will continue to receive quality and highly professional service and we are looking forward to receiving them there.”
